

sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. I do not believe that airing a "documentary" so obviously politically biased is in the "public interest". I believe that it is a partisan tactic aimed at affecting a political election. As such, there should be equal air time granted, and free of charge, to the opposing view point. Are these not the regulations by which broadcasters are supposed to abide?

Shame on the FCC for not enforcing this standard. The FCC is not supposed to be a partisan tool of whatever political party is in office, and yet you are showing yourselves to be exactly that. If you wish to have television broadcasts that do not support democracy and that seek to keep power within the hands in which it already resides, please move to China, North Korea, or travel back in time to the Soviet Union. That sort of belief system is totally undemocratic and unamerican.

Thank you for your time.
